Every detail in these 'nests' has been carefully considered so that there is no compromise on quality or amenity. The rooms' aesthetic, whilst influenced by Scandinavian functionality, are a reflection of modern Irish craft, landscape and attitude. The project was a collaborative effort between international architecture firm, BDP and 21 Spaces, an award-winning multidisciplinary interior architecture and design consultancy based in Dublin. Irish brands Truwood (Monaghan) and O'Donnell Furniture Makers (Killarney), Be Floral (Athlone) and Mourne Textiles, along with Jasmin Castagnaro of Italian design brand MIYUCA, were among the many collaborators contributing to the unique interior of the Wren. In addition, the hotel sources all its ingredients and toiletries from local suppliers, including The Handmade Soap Company. wrenhotel.ie

* SARA COSGROVE, a multi-disciplined interior designer from County Mayo, founded her own design business in 2014 and now boasts studios in both London and Dublin. Sara recently made a splash in the design world when she came up with the concept of a circus-themed bar for Decorex 2021, the objective being to create a space for industry members to reunite and to do something fun while attending the annual showcase. The idea was borne when Sara stumbled upon a circular bar made from an old grain silo. This repurposed grain silo provides a sense of fun, making it the perfect centrepiece for the scheme. She chose exotic drapes with which to clad the bar, while cascading lights created a warm glow, all of which was reflected by a giant disco ball. A combination of whimsy with a touch of mystery, the central bar was a popular talking point at Decorex. Sara says, "Decorex is such an important part of the designers' calendar and I missed it so much last year so jumped at the chance to involved in such a central way for this year's show."
